Stagnant water the real problem - the water flowing through the pipes quickly does not have the time to collect a lot of leached copper. Improper bending of the exhaust pipes, especially when making tighter curves, can spoil the pipe causing it to bend to the point of the curve. There might be a fee associated with this test, but if you are really worried, it might be worth getting peace of mind knowing for sure if your water is contaminated by unsafe copper. What to do if copper levels are not sure you find that your drinking water has too much copper, you don't necessarily have to be replaced all your pipes. The bending of your exhaust pipes ensures the best fit possible, because you adjust the curves as required, creating the necessary custom measurement. Remove the tube from the clamp and hold it in place to check its fit and adjust the fold as necessary. Pack the tube firmly with sand and plug both ends of the tube. However, there is a safe to consume a lot of copper. Add two to three inches for the overlap of the tube connection where the tube clamp is connected. For smaller stones, here you want the change of direction to begin. Of course, the wear and tear and tear will not be covered, so don't expect the blades to remain sharp forever.
